In the coming two decades the world will need to double, and quite possibly, triple energy output in order to meet growing world demand. The global environmental situation almost demands that the overwhelming majority of this energy be clean energy. And therein lays, quite possibly, the largest and most amazing investment of the first part of the 21st century - greentech. Which companies will win in this new era of clean energy? Which will lose? And how does the individual investor make sense of all the competing technologies? This guide will show readers how to be green by going clean.
