Lady Marie Anne, one of King William's goddaughters, was given as a bride prize to Laird Buchanan in William's latest tournament. As any lady would she had been terrified to wed a highlander who was thought to be savage. Laird Ian Buchanan had come to the tournament of England's new king on the whim of his mother who had heard her long lost daughter might be alive and be a prize in the tournament. Not only did they find his half-sister, Lady Evelyn, but Ian had found himself enthralled by the king's goddaughter Lady Marie. He had to have her and to do so he had to win her. Marriage vows exchanged and now with their fates intertwined, it was time for them to return to the highlands. Ian wanted Marie so bad he could feel the ache in his bones, but he was not sure what to do with women let alone a lady wife, so his challenge of wooing her to his side begins. Marie thought there was no possible way her husband had wed her of his own choice, but longs for it to be so. Her plan? To tempt him into desiring her and making him want her as she was starting to want him. His plan? To make her see him as more than a warrior and want her to be in his bed and in his arms willingly. However things don't go as planned and trouble is soon to darken their time together. Could love grow between them or will all be lost in the coming darkness.
