Fighting My Instincts: A Gay Conversion Therapy Dropout Story Angus MacGregor

Eighteen-year-old Dylan has a huge secret, and his mother just found out about it! Just when he has just begun experimenting on gay sex, his religious mother discovered his secret life and wouldn't put up with it. Without a choice, he was sent to "Straight Ahead" gay conversion camp in the mountains of Oregon to "pray away the gay." There Dylan meets other young men like himself, particularly one ridiculously hot guy named Sean, along with the rest of his sexy quad mates and even the "ex-homosexuals" who have graduated from the camp. It couldn't be more ironic once the activities start. The so-called conversion therapy turned out to be achieving the exact opposite, as Dylan found himself more attracted to guys than ever. But the longer they stay, the clearer the secrets of the camp and the ones who lead it get. No amount of conversion will ever make them straight, not even being sent to the "chair", the extreme punishment for those caught "giving into the temptation". And for Dylan, the chair may not be so far down the line when he and his quad mates are breaking the rules every chance they get.
