Timed Romance K'Anne Meinel

Falling in love gives you no time or place, no reason or excuses. It's a deliberate act that can leave you breathless from ecstasy or pain. There is no rhyme, no sense, no time. There is no precedence, no priority, it befuddles you. In the right time and place it can cause you to reach the highest highs or the lowest of lows. Bad timing though for any romance can hurt you more than the love itself. Reese has landed her dream job abroad. As she takes the challenge up she finds a relationship she never intended. Her romance with what is technically her employer heats up and both of them find themselves falling in love. It is perhaps the timing of this love that is their downfall. Lady Cavindish has never been in love before with man or woman. Her past haunts her. Her present isn't much of a life. Reese enters her life to be admired, to be emulated, to be loved. Her love is the best thing in this noble's world until life and real noble intentions wrench them apart. Fate however brings them together time and time again, can it time their romance so they can have their happily ever after or is it determined to rip their hearts raw time and time again?
