Russian Narrative and Visual Art: Varieties of Seeing

"New and original readings of some major works of Russian literature."--Victor Terras, professor emeritus, Brown University

This collection explores the interaction between visual and verbal artists in Russia in the nineteenth and twentieth centuries. It highlights instances of semiotic interplay between the two artistic media, revealing basic assumptions that Russian culture has maintained about the world and about itself. The book will appeal to scholars of Russian history, literature, and art, as well as to a broad readership interested in questions of cultural semiotics and the theory of art.
